INTRODUCTION

In support of my Final Major Project, I have constructed a comprehensive market research report, focusing on brands that celebrate fan culture and blend it with streetwear. The aim is to establish a brand that merges fashion with a strong dedication to sport—clothing that allows fans to express both their love for the game and their personal style. I believe there is a gap in the market for this type of design, and I feel personally connected to filling it. Too often, fans are forced to choose between style and sporting allegiance or combine mismatched pieces to complete a look. Playmakers bridges that gap.

Playmakers: Echo the Game, founded by Will Grubb, is a sports-inspired fashion brand built for fans. It allows them to wear their passion without compromising on fashion. The goal is for Playmakers to become a recognised symbol of sport fandom—so that when someone wears it, they're instantly seen as a sports fan.

Playmakers uses print in its designs to reflect niche sporting knowledge, capturing the movement and energy of sports and translating that into visually rich fan garments. These designs are paired with classic streetwear silhouettes, featuring subtle details and refined pattern cutting.

What sets Playmakers apart is its use of high-performance materials—waterproof, warm, and comfortable—combined with bold, emotionally-driven design. The brand's unique selling point lies in this fusion of technical functionality and emotional storytelling, creating pieces that not only perform on match day, but hold sentimental value. Like a beloved team shirt, Playmakers garments are designed to be passed down through generations, adding layers of meaning and making the brand truly sustainable in both form and spirit.

The brand's name is derived from the focus of fun to watch a player who is creative and exciting, a playmaker, the slogan 'echo the game' represents the prints and design inspired by the movement within sport.

Researching into my chosen competitors, Stone Island, Nike and Patta, I will learn how they design for their chosen communities and how they design and market themselves for their customers.

MARKET LEVEL AND COMPETITORS

Playmakers positions itself in the mid-to-premium market, offering elevated sports- Playmakers sits within the mid-to-premium market level, offering garments that are reasonably priced yet slightly above similar products due to their elevated detailing, storytelling, and build quality. While the brand is suitable for all ages, it primarily targets sports fans aged 20–30 who value both fashion and emotional connection to sport. The designs are unisex but are expected to attract a slightly higher male audience, reflecting current fanwear trends. Each limited-edition drop focuses on a specific sport, team, or iconic moment in sporting history, adding layers of meaning and collectability. Made with quality materials and craftsmanship, the garments are designed to be passed down through generations—echoing the way team shirts and memorabilia hold

CUSTOMER PROFILE

Demographics

The typical Playmakers customer is aged between 20–30, but is indented fo all ages. They live in urban or suburban areas across the UK, with potential to expand globally in sport-driven cities. They are mid-income earners, working in creative industries, retail, freelance, or studying people with some disposable income who are willing to invest in meaningful, well-designed clothing.

Lifestyle & Interests

They are active, socially connected, and deeply passionate about sport—especially football and golf, though they appreciate all sporting culture. Whether they attend games, watch religiously, or play casually, sport plays a major role in their life. They follow trends and brands via Instagram, TikTok, and fan-focused platforms, and often engage in online communities built around sport and fashion.

Style & Preferences

This customer is drawn to streetwear with purpose. They like clean, well-cut silhouettes with subtle detailing and hidden meaning. Functionality is key garments must be warm, waterproof, and comfortable enough for match days, but also stylish for everyday wear. They're inspired by brands like Stone Island, Nike F.C., Patta, and vintage fanwear. Limited drops, storytelling, and historical references make clothing feel collectible and personal.

Values & Buying Behaviour

They value clothing that tells a story—especially if it connects to moments in sport. Sustainability and long-lasting quality matter, particularly when the garment holds sentimental value. They're more likely to shop online, follow brands on social media, and respond to exclusive, limited-edition releases. They want their clothing to say something about who they are, and they're proud to wear pieces that represent their love for sport.

“Nike F.C. is not a team. It’s a club. It doesn’t have a training ground. It took the game to the next level and wrote the future.”

BRAND OVERVIEW

NIKE F.C.

Nike F.C. is a sub-label of Nike, Inc., officially launched in 2014 as a lifestyle-focused football collection. It was created to celebrate football culture beyond the pitch, targeting consumers who engage with the sport as part of their identity and daily lifestyle. The brand was introduced during the lead-up to the 2014 FIFA World Cup and has since expanded its presence globally through seasonal drops and culturally relevant campaigns.

The Nike F.C. line is inspired by historic football moments, legendary players, and global footballing cities. While Nike’s main football division focuses on technical performance apparel for athletes and teams, Nike F.C. is aimed at fans and consumers who want fashion-forward, football-inspired streetwear. The product range typically includes graphic t-shirts, hoodies, jackets, and track pants, often designed with references to iconic kits, football slang, or club culture. The pieces are made using Nike’s core apparel technology, combining comfort, durability, and style.

Nike F.C. targets a demographic of young adults aged 16–30, particularly those who value streetwear aesthetics and are part of urban and football-influenced subcultures. It appeals to both men and women, though marketing often leans toward a male audience. The line has been promoted through collaborations with professional footballers, digital creators, and influencers across platforms like Instagram and TikTok, positioning it as a bridge between sport, fashion, and youth culture.

In terms of market positioning, Nike F.C. sits within the affordable streetwear segment, typically priced lower than high-end fashion labels but higher than fast-fashion or entry-level sportswear. It competes with brands like Adidas Originals, Puma F.C., and independent streetwear labels that draw from football heritage. Nike F.C.’s success lies in its ability to maintain brand loyalty by tying sport with identity, culture, and fashion in an accessible and trend-relevant way.

CUSTOMER PROFILE

Demographics

The typical Nike F.C. customer is aged 16–30, with a strong concentration around young adults in their early to mid-20s. They live in global cities with rich football cultures—places like London, Berlin, Paris, and São Paulo. They're mostly male but Nike F.C.'s appeal is growing among women too. Many are students, young professionals, or creatives with a moderate income and a high awareness of fashion and sport culture.

Lifestyle & Interests

This customer is immersed in football culture. Whether watching matches, playing with friends, or following their favorite players on social media, football is part of their identity. They're active online, especially on Instagram, TikTok, and YouTube, and keep up with fashion, music, and sport trends. They value self-expression and often use their clothing to show love for the game—even outside match days.

Style & Preferences

They prefer comfortable, bold, and versatile streetwear. Nike F.C. customers are drawn to clothing with subtle football references—heritage-inspired graphics, performance cuts, or city-based storytelling. They like to mix sportswear with lifestyle gear, often pairing Nike F.C. apparel with sneakers, caps, or vintage football shirts.

The pieces must look good on the street, not just on the pitch.

Values & Buying Behaviour

Nike F.C. customers care about brand credibility, cultural relevance, and limited-edition appeal. They trust Nike's quality but are especially attracted to Nike

F.C.'s more niche, storytelling-driven angle. They buy online or in-store, often during big tournaments or event-led drops. They're loyal to football, inspired by the players and teams they follow, and want clothes that reflect that connection without being overtly “fan gear.”

BRAND AESTHETICS

Nike F.C.'s brand aesthetic blends the energy of football culture with a clean, contemporary streetwear edge. The visual style often incorporates bold typography, tonal colour palettes, and subtle nods to iconic football moments—like crests, slogans, or graphics inspired by classic kits. Silhouettes are sporty but modern, with technical fabrics and sleek cuts that make pieces wearable on and off the pitch. There's a balance of performance and lifestyle, where athletic references meet urban fashion trends. Overall, Nike F.C. is minimal yet expressive, designed to let wearers show their passion for the game without sacrificing personal style.

COLLECTION ANALYSIS

I was initially drawn to Nike FC's how they celebrate occasions and how this inspires their designs, often through branding and use of prints. The use of simple sporting silhouettes allows them to use interesting prints and block colours. Unlike Nike's traditional on-pitch gear, Nike F.C. collections are designed to be worn off the field, celebrating football culture through everyday clothing. Their most released garments are football jerseys but usually with a twist from the normal match day football jersey.

The Nike F.C. home shirt celebrates the Swoosh's history in French football with some throwback style. Instantly conjuring images of PSG's home kit from 1994-95, the first shirt features a red, white and blue colour scheme. Despite the retro feel of the template, the 'glitch' effect running down the centre of the shirt and both sleeves ties the design to the modern day. Three stars are embroidered on the neck collar on each shirt, representing Nike's three decades in French football. The words 'La Victoire' feature across the chest, meaning Victory, further strengthening the French link, while 'Nike F.C.' takes pride of place front and centre.

Celebrations like this give the garments meaning and something to represent for the wearer. Mixing this with a more interesting design than a classic playing top allows it to be worn with style whilst still representing your passion.

TECHNICAL FEATURES AND DESIGN FOCUS

Nike F.C. blends athletic performance with streetwear aesthetics, using its deep roots in football culture to shape its design approach. The brand's focus on marital use for their garments often using lightweight, breathable, and durable materials like Dri-FIT and tech fleece—ensuring comfort whether worn on or off the pitch. These fabrics offer moisture-wicking properties, flexibility, and weather adaptability, appealing to wearers who demand functionality alongside style. The design often includes clean silhouettes, mesh panelling for ventilation, and ergonomic cuts for ease of movement.

Branding is key to Nike F.C.'s identity—frequently featuring bold graphics, slogans like “without rick, there is no victory,” in different languages and discreet nods to football heritage. Logos are often strategically placed or woven into the fabric, giving the garments a minimal but powerful identity. The collection balances performance and culture, creating gear that speaks equally to athletes and fashion-conscious fans.

RANGE & PRICE POINT

Nike F.C. offers a streamlined but effective range of products that sit between performance wear and lifestyle streetwear. The collection includes jerseys, training tops, jackets, tracksuits, shorts, and accessories, all influenced by the energy and culture of global football. The range is designed to be versatile—suitable for both casual wear and light athletic use.

Nike F.C. is slightly elevated in cost compared to standard Nike sportswear, due to its exclusive branding, style-led design, and limited-edition drops. Overall, the range is positioned to balance function, cultural relevance, and affordability—making it attractive to sport-focused consumers with a streetwear sensibility.

I have focused on their most recent collection with Barcelona football club.

RANGE & PRICE ANALYSIS

Nike F.C. positions itself as a bridge between football performance and streetwear culture, offering a curated range that includes training tops, jerseys, jackets, joggers, T-shirts, shorts, and accessories. While the selection is more focused compared to broader Nike lines, each piece is designed with a stylistic edge and cultural relevance, often incorporating nods to football history, global fan culture, or iconic players. They offer a lot of kids wear as often the moment they are celebrating is new generation and attract a lot of kids. This is easily seen in the 2024 Barcelona collection.

In terms of pricing, Nike F.C. sits at an accessible premium level. Core pieces like T-shirts and caps fall within a reasonable price range, making the brand entry-friendly for younger fans or those seeking casual wear. Mid-range products such as track jackets, sweatshirts, and pants are slightly more expensive than standard Nike items due to their limited releases, enhanced materials (like Dri-FIT or tech fleece), and branding exclusivity. While Nike F.C. doesn't reach luxury price points, it maintains a distinct position above mass-market sportswear by offering greater storytelling, design intention, and collector appeal.

CONCLUSION

Nike F.C. successfully blends the worlds of football, fashion, and culture, offering a distinct identity within the wider Nike ecosystem. Through carefully curated drops, performance-driven materials, and a strong cultural narrative, the brand appeals to fans who want more than just sportswear—they want a lifestyle. Its accessible yet elevated price point makes it inclusive, while still feeling exclusive through limited releases and heritage-inspired designs. Nike F.C. has carved out a space where style, passion for football, and self-expression all coexist, making it a key player in the evolving intersection of sport and streetwear.

They use social media, influencer partnerships, limited drops, and cinematic campaign videos to create buzz and emotional connection. Nike F.C. also leverages Nike's global reach, appearing in select Nike stores and on the SNKRS app, with marketing that feels more cultural than commercial. The brand rarely oversaturates, maintaining exclusivity and hype through carefully timed releases and stylish editorial content.

FC REAL BRISTOL

F.C. Real Bristol (often abbreviated as FCRB) is not a football club in the traditional sense—it's a fictional team created in 1999 by Hirofumi

Kiyonaga, founder of the Japanese fashion label SOPHNET., in collaboration with Nike. The concept was born from Kiyonaga's desire to merge football culture with street fashion in a way that was both imaginative and boundary-pushing. Instead of designing for a real team, F.C. Real Bristol acts as a creative canvas for a “club that doesn't exist,” allowing full freedom in aesthetics, storytelling, and seasonal themes.

The brand's collections often reflect the identity of a real-world football club—complete with training wear, pre-match gear, off-pitch lifestyle pieces, and even sponsor-style graphics. Every detail, from the crests to the slogans, is designed as if FCRB were a living team competing in an elite league. Over the years, the collaboration with Nike has led to collections that blur the lines between sportswear, streetwear, and conceptual fashion, attracting fans across both the football and fashion worlds.

F.C. Real Bristol helped pioneer a new category of fashion—what some call “imagined sportswear”—long before the trend of fictional teams and sports-fashion hybrids became popular. It's regarded as one of the earliest examples of fashion's creative embrace of football culture. Now in its third decade, F.C. Real Bristol continues to drop limited-edition collections that explore new visuals, materials, and storytelling around the beautiful game, cementing its status as a cult favourite in streetwear history.

CUSTOMER PROFILE

Demographics

The typical F.C. Real Bristol customer is aged between 20 and 40, with a strong base in urban fashion hubs like Tokyo, Seoul, London, and New York. They are predominantly male but with a growing appeal among women who appreciate design-driven streetwear. Many customers work in or are influenced by creative industries—design, fashion, music, and media—with a disposable income that supports limited-edition and high-concept clothing purchases.

Lifestyle & Interests

FCRB customers are culture-forward individuals who value creativity, exclusivity, and storytelling in fashion. They are deeply interested in streetwear, contemporary art, and global subcultures, especially Japanese and European design movements. Football is part of their cultural identity—even if not a direct passion—often appreciated more for its aesthetics, symbolism, and history than regular match-watching.

Style & Preferences

These customers favour sleek, technical clothing with functional details and strong visual narratives. They're drawn to minimalist designs, hidden graphics, tonal branding, and the idea of wearing gear from a fictional football club as a creative statement. Layering is common in their style, mixing FCRB with other brands to create their outfit.

Values & Buying Behaviour

FCRB customers place high value on uniqueness, authenticity, and quality. They prefer brands that stand for something—whether it's cultural critique or experimental fashion. Most buy from select boutiques, online drops, or specialty fashion stores. Limited availability and collaboration hype play a big role in purchase behaviour. They're collectors at heart, often seeing garments as both fashion and art.

BRAND AESTHETICS

F.C. Real Bristol's brand aesthetic is a fusion of futuristic sportswear and minimalist streetwear, rooted in Japanese design principles. The label imagines the uniform of a fictional football club, resulting in collections that include everything from performance training kits to lifestyle-ready pieces. It is visual clean and modern—favouring dark colour palettes, muted tones, sharp silhouettes, and functional details. Branding is often subtle, with crest-style logos, mock sponsor prints, and understated typography. The aesthetic is both sporty and cerebral, appealing to those who appreciate concept-driven fashion that bridges fantasy and reality. FCRB's design DNA consistently reflects precision, innovation, and a playful reinterpretation of traditional football style codes. I really like how FCRB photoshoots often play with conventional football gear but match it with something not conventional. It brings across a fun element and show that they are a imaginary club.

COLLECTION ANALYSIS

The SS21 collection was the first time i encountered FC real Bristol and the way they presented the collection as match attack card style instantly interested me. It was innovative, nostalgic and fun, after the initial fun I was then enveloped in the brand combining 2 things I love football and streetwear. The vast collection sees hoodies, jackets, tees, pants, shorts, crew tops and more all presented in the recognisable block colourings that are synonymous with SOPH.'s football lifestyle branch. However, it's punctuated by some bold patterns that are splashed across certain items, lending the range a unique flair from what's come before.

F.C. Real Bristol's branding is simple yet highly effective, mirroring the identity of a real football club. The use of clean logos, sponsor-style graphics, and team crests gives the brand an authentic sports feel, while maintaining a minimalist design approach. This balance makes the branding instantly recognizable without being loud, allowing it to blend seamlessly into both streetwear and performance wear. The fictional club concept gives the branding a unique edge—creating a sense of belonging for fans of both fashion and football.

TECHNICAL FEATURES AND DESIGN FOCUS

F.C. Real Bristol is known for its highly technical designs, with a strong emphasis on craftsmanship, detail, and fabric innovation. Much of the brand's identity lies in the subtle features—such as hidden zippers, discreet embroidered branding, and smart panelling that enhances both silhouette and comfort. Material choice is a key focus, as garments are often designed to function across a range of activities. Whether for casual wear or active use, the fabrics are carefully selected for their performance qualities—typically waterproof, stretchable, and resistant to abrasion and tearing. This commitment to both design and durability reinforces FCRB's reputation as a fashion-forward, functional brand.

RANGE & PRICE POINT

FC Real Bristol has a total of 562 items on the online store. Ranging from phone cases too gloves too tracksuits. F.C. Real Bristol offers a wide range of products, adding depth and versatility to the brand—allowing customers to fully immerse themselves in the lifestyle of the fictional club. From technical outerwear to casual streetwear essentials, the broad offering ensures there's something for every occasion, making the brand not just stylish but also functional and wearable day-to-day.

AROUND LOGO BAGGY TEE

Baggy silhouette T-shirt with the BRISTOL logo that wraps around the body and both sleeves. There is also an embroidered accent on the L on the left sleeve. The cotton x polyester jersey body has an authentic look and is extremely comfortable to wear.

RANGE & PRICE ANALYSIS

F.C. Real Bristol offers a broad and versatile product range that covers everything from outerwear and technical sportswear to casual everyday pieces and accessories. The brand's collections are thoughtfully curated, often themed around imagined seasons or team campaigns, giving a consistent and immersive feel. Each drop typically includes a mix of performance-inspired garments and more relaxed lifestyle pieces, allowing customers to engage with the brand across different aspects of their wardrobe.

In terms of pricing, F.C. Real Bristol positions itself as a premium streetwear label. While not the most accessible, the price point reflects the attention to detail, material quality, and design innovation. The garments are considered an investment—carefully crafted to offer both style and function. This pricing strategy helps maintain a sense of exclusivity and aligns with the brand's positioning in the fashion-sportswear crossover market. The focus on craftsmanship and limited releases justifies the elevated cost and appeals to consumers looking for both utility and originality in their clothing.

CONCLUSION

FCRB combines football with streetwear very well and does though the products they sell but also the design. The brand name is one of the largest in this small market and is often considered the first to create this style. FCRB relies on a sense of exclusivity and word-of-mouth within fashion and streetwear communities, however, does market itself through the SOPHNET's social media channels. They are often featured in high end Japanese stores but have limited in person access across the rest of the world. This controlled, under-the-radar strategy enhances its mystique and positions the brand as a collector's item within the fashion-sport crossover space.

In conclusion, FCRB executes the sport-streetwear balance exceptionally well. The brand stays relevant without becoming mainstream—exactly where it seems to want to be. Its design approach is subtle yet compelling, drawing in a diverse audience from both sports and fashion backgrounds, and maintaining long-term interest through innovation and restraint.

BRAND OVERVIEW

CP COMPANY

C.P. Company, often hailed as the godfather of sportswear, is a pioneering Italian menswear brand that fuses military functionality with streetwear aesthetics. Founded in 1971 by Massimo Osti, the brand was originally named Chester Perry before being rebranded to its current name in 1978. Osti, known for his innovative and experimental mindset, brought a design philosophy that merged utilitarian purpose with fashion-forward thinking. His work laid the groundwork for what would later be defined as “techwear,” influencing generations of designers across both luxury and streetwear spaces.

At the heart of C.P. Company’s identity is its commitment to fabric innovation and garment dyeing. The brand was the first to introduce garment dyeing on a commercial scale—an approach that allows finished garments to be dyed in one piece, creating rich, unique color tones and finishes.

C.P. Company is perhaps best known for its signature lens detailing, most famously seen in the Goggle Jacket—a piece originally designed for the Mille Miglia race. The inclusion of goggles in the hood and lens in the sleeve pocket are not just visual icons but represent the brand’s dedication to functional design rooted in performance and real-world use.

Garments are often modular, technical, and weather-resistant, combining fashion with practical purpose. This makes C.P. Company especially appealing to urban commuters, outdoor enthusiasts, and fashion-conscious fans of functional design.

Beyond its product, C.P. Company holds a strong cultural position. It has a longstanding relationship with football fan culture, especially within the UK’s casual’s scene, where its outerwear became symbolic of both style and status. Today, it remains a cult favourite among those who value timeless quality, subcultural influence, and innovation in design.

CUSTOMER PROFILE

Demographic

The core C.P. Company customer is male, aged 25–45, with a mid-to-high disposable income. He is often based in urban areas across Europe, particularly the UK and Italy, but also has a strong presence in Japan. While mostly male, the brand is also attracting a growing unisex following among younger streetwear fans.

Lifestyle & Interests

This customer typically leads a busy, city-based lifestyle, balancing work, social life, and hobbies. He's interested in football, street culture, music, and fashion that reflects personal identity. Often found commuting, attending matches, or exploring city spaces, comfort and practicality in clothing are key. He values community and may engage in collector culture—keeping an eye on special drops and limited releases.

Style & Preference

C.P. Company customers favour a technical, minimalist, and performance-focused aesthetic. They prefer clothing that feels premium but understated, with a love for functional features like hidden zips, lens details, or garment dyeing. The typical wardrobe includes well-cut outerwear, utility pieces, and neutral tones, often layered with streetwear staples. Subtlety, clean design, and durability are central to their style.

Values & Buying Behaviour

This customer values quality, innovation, and authenticity, often investing in garments that are technically advanced, well-made, and rooted in cultural storytelling. They appreciate thoughtful design, fabric technology, and the brand's connection to football fan culture and streetwear history. C.P. Company is not an impulse buy—shoppers often research collections, wait for drops, and purchase selectively from trusted stockists or direct channels. Influenced more by community, brand legacy, and word-of-mouth than by trends, they view their garments as long-term

BRAND AESTHETICS

C.P. Company's aesthetic is defined by a seamless blend of military-inspired functionality and modern urban style. The brand is known for its technical outerwear, garment dyeing, and utilitarian design—often using functional elements like multiple pockets, ergonomic cuts, and signature lens details. Their silhouettes are simple and well fitted to give the smart appearance. The colour palette leans toward muted, earthy tones like olive, grey, navy, and black, reflecting its roots in workwear and performance gear. Subtlety is key—C.P. Company garments don't rely on loud logos but instead use distinctive construction and fabric innovation to stand out. The look is clean, practical, and layered, appealing to those who want everyday wear with a high level of craftsmanship and technical flair.

COLLECTION ANALYSIS

The SS2020 collection was shot in Naples a place that reflect the brand ethos, tradition and innovation with CP constantly looking to the future (innovative technologies, materials, and fabrics) and, at the same time, always keeping in mind the legacy of its founder. Items in the collection reinvent classic pieces such as the Goggle Jacket and hoodies, continuing with the study and application of garment dyeing, the solid piece of Osti's legacy.

I think the main attraction of the collection is M.T.t.N jacket which is given a fractured surface effect by using two different nylon fibres that have different tensions. Garment dyeing still used for most of the collection continuing the CP legacy. The collections silhouettes are very usual for CP with the bulk of the design coming in the details.

Branding of CP is always very subtle but very recognisable with the goggle with the garments. Making it unmissable but not taking away from the sleek technical design.

COLLABORATIONS

CP company has become synonymous with football fan culture, this started back in the 70s with fans going to Europe to watch the English teams and bringing back European brands. This trend was called the casual movement and has influenced football fan fashion massively today. CP was one of these brands and is still known around England as a football fan brand.

Many years later CP have collaborated with Manchester City to become the Official Style Fashionwear Partner for the next 5 years. Lorenzo Osti, President of C.P. Company says “Our partnership represents an exciting journey from Bologna to Manchester, where two visions, inspired by the same values, harmoniously merge. The aesthetic symbolism of the C.P. Company Goggle Jacket has become an icon for football fans, a project where sporting aspiration embraces and keeps its roots alive.”

The brand will design an exclusive range of fashionwear to be worn by the players, coaching staff, and executive management during UEFA Champions League away fixtures, as well as other select matches. Among the standout pieces is the iconic Goggle Jacket, which will feature a customised silhouette with co-branded lenses and embroidered logos. All garments will be reimagined in the signature colours of C.P. Company (Navy Blue) and Manchester City (Light Blue).

TECHNICAL FEATURES AND DESIGN FOCUS

C.P. Company's legacy is defined by iconic garments that have shaped the brand's identity. The brand's commitment to innovation, functionality and unique aesthetics is clear and the heritage of craftsmanship and design that set new standards in sportswear.

C.P. Company places a strong emphasis on innovation, functionality, and textile experimentation. One of the brand's most iconic technical features is the goggle lens, integrated into hoods or sleeve pockets—originally inspired by racing driver hoods and now a visual signature. The most well know is the garment dying process that CP use so much and are credited with apply it to garments made from multiple fabrics or fibre types. Dying this way give different creates an impressive “tone-on-tone” effect, uneven tones, and creating a broken in feel. This process has been synonymous with CP ever since and done on many of their nylon-based jackets.

Many pieces are crafted from Nyfoil, Pro-Tek, or Chrome-R—technical fabrics known for being lightweight, water-resistant, and breathable, designed to withstand a range of urban and outdoor conditions. Functionality is further elevated through multi-pocket utility designs, ergonomic panelling, and hidden ventilation systems, allowing wearers to move comfortably while staying protected from the elements. These details, while subtle, are essential in creating C.P. Company's distinct blend of fashion and performance.

RANGE & PRICE POINT

C.P. Company offers a comprehensive range of garments (276) that includes outerwear, knitwear, sweatshirts, trousers, accessories, and technical layers—covering everything from seasonal staples to statement pieces. Prices reflect the high level of craftsmanship, material innovation, and brand heritage. Entry-level items such as t-shirts and caps are moderately priced, making the brand accessible to new customers, while mid-range offerings like sweatshirts and cargo trousers fall into a premium bracket. The outerwear, often constructed from high-spec materials and packed with technical features, sits at a higher price point, reflecting its status as the brand’s hero category. Overall, the brand sits in the premium tier, justifiable by its blend of functionality, storytelling, and long-term wearability.

RANGE & PRICE ANALYSIS

C.P. Company positions itself firmly in the premium market, offering a product range that blends high-performance functionality with refined urban aesthetics. The brand's collection is broad, covering outerwear, sweats, cargo trousers, knitwear, T-shirts, and accessories, all designed with purpose and technical flair. While it caters to everyday wear, each piece is built with thoughtful construction and materials that enhance usability—particularly evident in the brand's hero category: outerwear.

Pricing is structured to reflect the craftsmanship and innovation at the core of the brand. Entry-level items such as caps and graphic tees are relatively accessible, appealing to a younger or more budget-conscious customer. Mid-range offerings like utility sweatshirts and tech trousers sit in a higher bracket, reflecting the premium positioning. At the top end, technical outerwear, particularly the signature Goggle jackets and garment-dyed overshirts, command a higher price due to their fabric technology, functional details, and dyeing processes.

The brand's pricing is not just about luxury—it's tied to longevity, function, and collectible value. With seasonal drops and limited editions, C.P. Company maintains a sense of exclusivity, appealing to both streetwear enthusiasts and those seeking long-lasting, statement outerwear. The price point reinforces the brand's identity as a technical innovator rooted in subcultural heritage.

PRIMARY RESEARCH

The store in soho is amongst many other high-end brands blending in with the others with big glass windows. The store is set out very well and looks clean and professional with plenty of space to walk around and look. The staff working there very smartly dresses in suites and dresses, also very knowledgeable and approachable. The different garment sections are well separated and often colour matched. The whole store has a very minimalistic and technical feel to it aligning well with their ethos.

On the window of the store is some history of their new fisherman jacket, giving the details of the fabric and manufacturing techniques used. This sort of marketing I like as it draws you in but uses their USP of innovation and high quality.

The walls are concrete and metal with very little décor on them. The rails are metal and simple. There is a small number of promotional images around the store, nothing there to take you away from the clothing itself, that is the focus. I think the store reflects CP very well and embodies the brand.

Fisherman Jacket is a double-coated nylon stretch warp knit fabric. The front has a shiny finish while the back is open. When the fabric is penetrated, the needle-punched texture is evenly revealed.

CONCLUSION

C.P. Company stands as a pioneer in blending technical innovation with urban style, carving out a unique space between fashion, sport, and function. Its deep-rooted connection to subcultures—especially football casuals—combined with a commitment to fabric experimentation and garment dyeing, has solidified its place as a leader in performance-driven streetwear. With a loyal and knowledgeable customer base, C.P. Company continues to evolve while staying true to its original ethos of purposeful design, quality craftsmanship, and understated individuality. They market themselves through social media accounts, they visually driven storytelling, showcasing not just products, but the craftsmanship, fabric innovation, and subcultural relevance behind each collection. The brand remains a symbol of authentic style and practical sophistication, appealing to those who value both legacy and innovation in their wardrobe.

In conclusion they have a very clear brand ideology, and they stick to this in every aspect from the clothing to marketing to the store. The price reflects this as they don't go looking for new customer, they have their loyal fan base and stick to what they are good at.

MARKET RESEARCH REPORT SUMMARY

Playmakers aims to contribute to a niche market combining streetwear and sports. With limited and unique designs that capture the essence of both backgrounds. The brand's approach to sales would be to celebrate occasions much like Nike F.C. have done. Creating hype for an event and focusing on one section of customers.

PRICING STRATEGY

After conducting this research, I have positioned playmakers in the moderate to high price range ranging from £60 for more basic garments like tee-shirts and accessories to £250 for the more personal and detailed like jackets. This range will vary depending on the materials and design processes undertaken.

DESIGN PHILOSOPHY

Drawing inspiration from all 3 brands playmakers design philosophy is to make garments that celebrate sporting moments whilst being wearable within everyday life. These garments to be designed from the sporting moment making them unique and special to the customer. The clothing will be high quality and use thought after materials to ensure a long life for the garments.

USP

Player makers USP will combine elements from Nike F.C. and FC Real Bristol.

From Nike F.C.: creating garments that celebrate sporting occasions with strong branding and interesting designs.

From FC Real Bristol: mixing sportswear with streetwear to be create a celebration of sport that that can be worn away from the game.

Playmakers aims to be a personal brand that values its community and please its customs. Garments would be sold online with irregular but well marketed drops, occasional pop ups and a main store. Playmakers wouldn't be sold through Highstreet shops to try keep the exclusivity and sense of community.

BRAND ASPIRATIONS

The future of playmakers is for it to be a known sports fans brand and be recognised within that community. The branding should represent your love of sport, collaborating with many different areas of sports and brands. Gaining a cult following from many different sporting backgrounds. Having some limited collections to celebrate sporting greatness and these garments to be passed down generations as a sense of pride from the wearer.

CONCLUSION

Playmakers aims to be a brand that combines the best elements of Nike F.C., FC Real Bristol and CP company. Focusing on sporting fans and celebrating moment's sporting moments. Operating in a moderate price range allowing all sporting backgrounds to access and join the community. The designs to be formed from a celebration of an important moment in sport and to wore with proud.
